The Lizard Downs form the approach to the Lizard Point, the most southerly headland in Great Britain. It consists of a peninsula about 3 miles in width, of a uniform height of 200 to 300 feet above sea level, and is therefore practically a tableland. The highest altitude is on Goonhilly Downs, about 370 feet above sea level. The district is singularly barren, the chief growth consisting of Cornish heath (Erica Vagans), a plant found in no other district of Great Britain.
